Chapter 2 by Melotoxin

Today was different. I honestly can't imagine a better word to describe it, though that might just be the pills talking. It started as soon as I woke up. It was the first night in the new house. What a terrible small little place. The walls leak some kind of black fluid and the floors creak so much I felt like I'd fall through them. Its drafty, even with the air conditioner on full blast and worst of all, I have to share a bed, a small bed, with my little brother, Donald.

The moment I woke up, I felt something awful in my chest, like someone had set a bolder on me while I was asleep. I got up and did everything I usually do in the mornings, bath, brush teeth, cry for a good 3 minutes, and eat some burnt toast. It wasn't until I was ready to leave for my first day of school that I realized something was missing. My little brother.

My mother seemed fine, sitting at the breakfast table sipping her tea, and my father was probably off in Mexico doing the same thing. I always wondered what my father was like, though I don't remember him. I always thought about him at breakfast and how he broke our family, but that's not what was strange. Donald wasn't in bed, or the bathroom and he wasn't downstairs. I couldn't imagine where he could have been.

So I asked my mom a pretty simple question. Where is Donald? And this is the strange part, she replied, "Donald who?"
